

SECTION I, ITEM 5 – ORGANIZATION AND MANAGEMENT

COMPONENTS OF SYSTEM DESCRIPTION

Fiber to the Premises

Verizon NJ has been upgrading its telecommunications facilities in its telecommunications service territory to provide fiber optic facilities directly to subscriber premises. The construction of Verizon NJ's fiber-to-the-premises network (the "FTTP Network") is performed under Title II of the Communications Act of 1934 and under the appropriate state telecommunications authority granted to Verizon NJ by the New Jersey Board of Public Utilities and Chapters 3 and 17 of the Department of Public Utilities Act of 1948. Verizon NJ uses the FTTP Network to provide cable television services throughout specified portions of its telecommunications system. Fiber-to-the-premises ("FTTP") uses fiber-optic cable and optical electronics to directly link homes to the Verizon NJ network.

Redundant Super-Headends

All content is encoded into MPEG compliant streams and transported over nationwide synchronous optical network ("SONET") services. At the national level, two redundant "super" headends ("SHE") located in Temple Terrace, Florida and Bloomington, Illinois serve as the points of national content aggregation. These SHEs are strategically located to ensure compliance with technical and environmental requirements. Key functions of the SHEs include content reception, signal processing, encoding, and network interface. Both network redundancy and route diversity are extended from the SHE to the video hub office ("VHO").

Video Hub Offices

In each market where Verizon NJ and other subsidiaries of Verizon Communications Inc. provide video service, the broadcast cable television traffic is off-loaded from the long-haul network and terminated at a VHO. The VHO serves as the metro or local point of aggregation. The interactive program guide ("IPG") is also controlled from this site. The service exiting the VHO is the final product viewed by end user subscribers.

The VHO aggregates three basic sources of content – national broadcast channels, local broadcast channels, and PEG channels. The national content is sent from the SHE and delivered through SONET facilities. Local broadcast channel content is collected through terrestrial connections to local programmers and routed over the company's interoffice SONET network. PEG channels are collected via terrestrial connections from each local franchise area served by the VHO.

Two VHOs serve New Jersey, one located in Freehold, New Jersey and one in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. New Jersey subscribers within the New York DMA are served by the Freehold VHO. The Freehold VHO is connected to the Queens VHO and the Philadelphia VHO through the company's redundant, inter-office network facilities. All local broadcast content distributed by the Freehold VHO is sent to the Freehold VHO from the Queens VHO and the Philadelphia VHO. Therefore, there are no direct connects from broadcasters terminating at the Freehold VHO. All direct connects in the New York DMA are at the Queens VHO. All direct connects in the Philadelphia DMA are at the Philadelphia VHO. Because the fully operational Queens and Philadelphia VHOs already have terrestrial connections to all local broadcast programmers serving the New York and Philadelphia DMAs, the Freehold VHO is connected to the Queens and Philadelphia VHOs through interoffice SONET facilities. This interoffice connection allows the terrestrial transmission of all local broadcast channels to the New York and Philadelphia DMAs.

The functions of the VHO include Wide Area Network ("WAN") interface for cable television transport, ad insertion, PEG content, signal grooming and multiplexing, emergency alert service, IPG, conditional access, and local content. As content leaves the VHO, it is encrypted as necessary, and multiplexed into groupings suitable for quadrature amplitude modulation ("QAM") carriers. This final collection of content is placed into digital multiplexes, suitable to be delivered by QAM-256 modulated carriers. These optical cable television signals are transported on the 1550 nm wavelength of the G.983-specified enhancement band to the company's video serving offices ("VSOs"). One delivery exception is with regard to PEG services, which are delivered by the VHO as single program streams which are then multiplexed together at the VSO downstream of the VHO. Edge modulation equipment is deployed in the VSOs to generate the final QAM-256 signals. The broadcast cable television traffic/service exiting the VHO is intended to look like the final product viewed by the end-user-subscriber.

Video Serving Offices

Cable television traffic is converted to optical signals at the VHO and transported to VSOs over Verizon NJ's metro area, inter-office facilities. VSOs are equipped with FTTP and are located in existing local wire centers (also referred to as "central offices"). The key function of the VSO is to combine broadcast cable television into the voice and high speed data FTTP Network. Voice and high-speed data signals are combined with the cable television at this location for final transport to the subscriber premises over the FTTP passive optical network ("PON").

At the VSO, optical signals are sent into edge modulation equipment through an erbium-doped fiber amplifiers and then into a wave division multiplexer combiner and splitter, which is used to add the cable signal to the voice and high-speed data signals' wavelength (from the optical line terminal) together with the cable wavelength onto a single optical source. This optical signal is then sent towards the subscriber premises via a PON.

Subscriber Premises

At the subscriber's premises, an optical network terminal de-multiplexes the optical signal and converts it to a cable television electric signal, which meets cable television industry standards for cable services. In many cases, standard home wiring practices, using coaxial cables, distribute the signals to set-top-boxes. Verizon NJ service technicians install the service and provide customers with any required equipment. Customers also have the option to self-install.

SECTION IV, ITEM 2(b) – SYSTEM DESIGN

EQUIPMENT AND TRAINING DESCRIPTION

In areas where Verizon NJ provides cable service, the company makes video production and editing equipment and training programs available at various colleges and other institutions for use in the development of local programming content that can be shown on public, educational and governmental (“PEG”) access channels. NJEDge.Net, a non-profit technology consortium of academic and research institutions in New Jersey, serves as Verizon NJ’s program implementation coordinator for its member participants with studio facilities that currently participate in Verizon NJ’s “PEG Training and Equipment Program,” including Bergen Community College, Brookdale Community College, Essex County College, Gloucester County Institute of Technology, Mercer County Community College, Ocean County College and Union County College.

Training is conducted at the participants’ studio facilities. Two training programs are available – basic skills and advanced training. The basic skills training program includes instruction by experienced professionals in camera use and basic lighting, audio, graphics and editing techniques. For those who complete basic skills training and wish to further develop their production skills, advanced training is available. Video production equipment that Verizon stores with each participant is made available for loan, free of charge and for a reasonable amount of time, on a first-come, first-served basis to those who complete at least basic skills training. Verizon NJ, in collaboration with NJEDge.Net, periodically evaluates demand for equipment and adequacy of the training.

Verizon NJ provides periodic notice to municipalities of the availability of the PEG Equipment and Training Program, which notice includes a description of the equipment access policy. Information is also provided when a municipality is added to Verizon NJ’s system-wide franchise and upon the launch of each PEG access channel.

SECTION IV, ITEM 3 – SYSTEM DESIGN

MULTIPLE DWELLING UNIT DESCRIPTION

Verizon NJ is committed to providing service to multiple dwelling units (“MDUs”) on a non-discriminatory basis. The manner in which MDUs are served depends on technological developments, the infrastructure of the buildings at issue, and the terms and conditions of access. Verizon NJ’s preferred method of serving MDUs is to install fiber directly to each living unit. Some MDUs may have unique characteristics and considerations that require an alternative approach.

Verizon NJ’s standard technical solution is to deploy FTTP to MDUs using a fiber-to-the-living-unit architecture. This architecture involves the deployment of a passive fiber network from the central office to each living unit, and the installation of a single family unit optical network terminal (“SFU ONT”) in each living unit. The SFU ONT serves as the single interface for voice, data and video services delivered over the FTTP network. Existing wiring within the living unit is used to provide the FTTP services.<sup>1</sup>

Verizon NJ will continue to negotiate in good faith for access to MDUs and will continue to provide service to similarly situated MDUs on a non-discriminatory basis. Verizon NJ has experienced issues in obtaining access to MDU properties and has notified the Board and Rate Counsel accordingly. If Verizon NJ determines that it cannot deploy service to an MDU, Verizon NJ will continue to notify the Board and Rate Counsel and explain why service cannot be provided.

<sup>1</sup> This same architecture is being used to serve residential customers living in single family units.
