

A connection as strong as your patient care

5G connected laptops for behavioral health workers

To provide proper care, behavioral health workers need to be able to connect with their patients. They also often have to connect to unreliable public networks. On top of the security issues posed by weak Wi-Fi, behavioral health workers may have to worry about excessive drops in connectivity, which could disrupt crucial conversations and data-sharing moments.

Fortunately, we can help. 5G connected laptops powered by Verizon can help alleviate these concerns, offering access to a secure, reliable network from virtually anywhere workers choose to log in.

Benefits of 5G connected laptops in behavioral health

Stay productive from virtually anywhere.

5G connected laptops allow behavioral health professionals to be productive from a wide range of locations so they can facilitate convenient treatment options for patients at doctors' offices or the patients' homes.

Our network can help workers offer better care.

Built-in access to 5G helps promote fast, secure circulation of vital records, including intake forms, session notes and prescriptions. It also helps behavioral health workers access and download large data files (such as X-rays) or use cloud-based healthcare apps.

Protect patient confidentiality.

By avoiding risky external networks, behavioral health workers can process and share sensitive patient information securely, helping support Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act (HIPAA) compliance requirements.

Simplify IT management.

Integrated operating systems across 5G connected laptops can help IT staff manage behavioral health workers' devices and improve cost efficiencies remotely.
