The Internet Rush Hour

Did you ever notice that your internet connection sometimes isn't as quick in the evening?

The heaviest hours of Internet usage happen between 7PM and 11PM. This is “Internet rush hour,” when people all around the country are downloading files, refreshing social networks and surfing the web.
Many factors can slow down your connection, but often, it's just too many people on the roads. Even if you have a super fast car...or an extra wide highway.

Everyone is affected by Internet rush hour, but Verizon FiOS customers have an advantage. FiOS provides a high bandwidth, 100% fiber optic connection directly to your home, while cable customers have to share theirs with the whole neighborhood.
And according to FCC studies, Verizon FiOS consistently delivers speeds that are higher than what we advertise—even during internet rush hour.
